ICC to Present at ADA Training in Indiana

Architects, builders, code officials, facility managers and other industry stakeholders are welcomed to register for the full day training New Accessibility Standards in the Built Environment, which will be held June 16, at the JW Marriot, Indianapolis, Ind.

The U.S. Department of Justice recently adopted the 2010 ADA Standards. On March 15, 2012, all new construction and alternations must comply with them. Until then, either the 2010 Standards, 1991 Standards (minus the elevator exemption), or UFAS (for public entities) may be used.

Presenting will be Kim Paarlberg, International Code Council Staff Architect. She will discuss the accessibility requirements of the International Building Code as they relate to the 2010 ADA Standards, and how coordination of accessibility requirements has an impact on State Building Codes, including Indiana. Also presenting will be Paul Beatty, Accessibility Specialist from the U.S. Access Board. The U.S. Access Board developed the accessibility guidelines that were included in the 2010 ADA Standards for Accessible Design adopted by the Department of Justice.

Take the ICC Member Mobile Web Use Survey

The International Code Council needs a short amount of your time to assist with a research project designed to improve communications between Members and the organization. ICC recognizes the building safety community is evolving, and ICC wants to keep pace by ensuring our strategic plans and resources are in line with what our Members and the industry need and expect.

One aspect of the building safety industry that cannot be ignored is technology. The Code Council would like to gain a better insight on the Mobile-web usage (Blackberry, iPhone, Android, Windows Phones, iPad, etc.) of ICC Members. Member feedback is extremely important, so ICC asks you to please take the time to complete this brief survey regarding how you use mobile devices. Link is here:

The information gained from this survey will help ICC better serve you.

Thank you for your ongoing support of ICC.
